ISSUES PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

1. Does the Court of Appeal's opinion de facto overrule this Court's opinions in Loeffler v. Target Corp. (2014) 58 Cal.4th 108 and Javor v. SBE (1974) 12 Cal.3d 790 by creating prerequistes to pursuing a Javor remedy which are by definition impossible to fulfill, not only for the three million California diabetics in this action, but for all California consumers regarding any sales tax issue?

2. In rewriting the presumption in California Civil Code §1656.1 from "rebuttable" to "irrebuttable," does the Court of Appeal cause California's sales tax scheme to violate this Court's direct holding in National Ice & Cold Storage Co. v. Pacific Fruit Express Co. (1938) 11 Cal.2d 283, and by escheating money with no recourse, to violate the United States Constitution's Due Process and Takings Clauses?

INTRODUCTION

The McClain opinion is the first interpreting Javor since this Court's decision in Loeffler. Unfortunately, despite arising from a lower court, the McClain opinion would de facto overrule this Court's holdings in Javor and Loeffler that a consumer, the real party in interest in a sales tax transaction, may compel a retailer, the nominal party in interest, to pursue a refund from the SBE. It would also overturn this Court's holding in National Ice that for one legally responsible for a tax to collect reimbursement from another, consent must be obtained, "either expressly or impliedly given."

Before the McClain opinion, when a California retailer overcharged a customer by adding sales tax reimbursement to the sales price on a tax-exempt sale, the customer had at least two rights of recourse: (1) the customer could "join the Board as a party to his suit for recovery against the retailer in order to require the Board in response to the refund application from the retailers to pay the refund owed the retailers into court" (Javor at 802-803) and (2) the customer could sue the retailer by rebutting the rebuttable presumption "that the parties had agreed to the addition of sales tax reimbursement." (Civil Code §1656.1.) Petitioners' First and Fifth Causes of Action are based on precisely those two rights of recourse.

In Loeffler, a 4-3 opinion of this Court, Justice Liu, writing for the dissent, warned courts to not overread Loeffler as applying to all cases involving a sales tax issue: "The court's ruling...need not be read to broadly establish that a consumer action may never go forward if it involves a tax issue." (58 Cal.4th at 1142.) In fact, the majority opinion seemed careful to employ language signaling that the Court it was not dooming all consumer actions involving a sales tax issue, but was limited to the claims and procedural peculiarities of the case before it. (E.g., 58 Cal.4th at 1123-24 ["a consumer claim such as plaintiffs'"; "[a] consumer lawsuit in this context"]; at 1130 ("[a]ctions of this sort"]; at 1131-32 ["these plaintiffs' UCL and CLRA claims"].)

Yet despite these warnings, the McClain court has read this Court's opinion in Loeffler so broadly as to make a Javor remedy definitionally impossible, effectively overruling it.

Important to bear in mind, in Loeffler, 1. the SBE was not a party; 2. the plaintiff expressly disavowed any desire to pursue a Javor remedy; and, 3. the plaintiff did not pursue a breach of contract remedy. In this case, 1. the SBE is a party; 2. plaintiff wants to pursue a Javor remedy; and, 3. the plaintiff has pursued breach of contract.

Regarding the first of these three important differences, Loeffler makes clear its concern that when a court decides a taxability issue, it has the benefit of having the SBE present and its voice heard:

> [I]f the taxability question proceeds from administrative proceedings to court, the Board will be the opposing party in any ensuing legal challenge. (See § 6933; see also § 6711.) The Board will be present to fully and vigorously litigate its position, leading to a judgment that defines the law for all and is binding on the Board for the future." (Id. at 1129.)

In fact, although they advocate against it now, prior to Loeffler, the retailer defendants in this case themselves argued that Petitioner should be allowed to pursue a Javor remedy:

> The appropriate remedy for a consumer who has erroneously overpaid sales tax to a retailer, who has in turn paid the taxes to the Board, is to join the Board as a party to his suit for recovery against the retailer, so that the Board may be > required to respond to refund applications by the retailer and pay the refunds into court .... [Citing Javor.]

(Walmart's and Sav-on / Albertson's Separate Mem. ISO Demurrer to First Amended Complaint, both filed on or about April 19, 2005 (emphasis added), quoted at AA 496.)

> The California Supreme Court in Javor I intended to provide a specific remedy for taxpayers to recover improperly collected sales taxes from retailers. ...That remedy is all that Plaintiffs should be permitted to seek here."

(Defendants' Reply ISO Mtn. to Strike Portions of Second Amended Complaint, 12/28/2005 [emphasis in original] quoted at AA 496-497).)

Loeffler expressly confirmed the continuing utility of the Javor remedy in order to preserve the integrity of the tax system and avoid unjust enrichment to the state. (Loeffler at 1133) Loeffler noted that "such a remedy invokes, rather than avoids, tax code procedures." (Id. at 1101.) But, because the plaintiffs in that case declined to pursue a Javor remedy, Loeffler left open the question as to what circumstances are needed for a Javor remedy. (Id. at 1133-34.)

But now, although Javor has never been overruled, the Court of Appeal below interpreted Javor in such a manner as to effectively abolish the Javor -type remedy. It did so by imposing supposed "prerequisites" that by definition no case, not even Javor itself, could possibly satisfy. The Court of Appeal apparently believed that its result was preordained by Loeffler:

> Further, our Supreme Court in Loeffler-although silent on this point-noted no constitutional impediment to its ruling that left consumers with no direct remedy for a refund and instead relegated them to urging Board inquiry and to filing claims or actions under the Administrative Procedure Act. (Loeffler, supra, 58 Cal.4th 1081.) Were we to come to a contrary conclusion, we would effectively overrule Loeffler, something we are not allowed to do except in narrow circumstances not present here. (Auto Equity Sales v. Superior Court (1962) 57 Cal.2d 450, 456.)

(Op. 26-27.)

The result reached by the Court of Appeal not only was not preordained by Loeffler, but violates it. If Javor is no longer good law, despite this Court's statement in Loeffler reaffirming the continued utility of Javor, then that conclusion must be reached by this Court and not by an intermediate court.

The Attorney General of the State of California, now its Governor, wrote to this Court on April 1, 2010, as an amicus in support of the consumers' position and contrary to the position of the SBE in Loeffler, in part as follows:

> Contrary to the reasoning put forth by Target Corporation (Target) and adopted by the Court of Appeal, the strictures of article XIII, section 32 of the state Constitution (article XIII, section 32) and Revenue and Taxation Code section 6931 (section 6931) do not apply to the claims at issue. Plaintiffs in this case are not attempting to impede, directly or indirectly, the state's collection of taxes; they are challenging Target's alleged unlawful and fraudulent practice of imposing a charge in the guise of a tax. Nothing in the language of article XIII, section 32 or the Revenue and Taxation Code suggests a prohibition on suits by private litigants alleging that a retailer is collecting money from consumers in a > deceptive manner by passing off charges as government mandates when they are not...[H]aving been given a "get-out-of liability-free" card, it is easy to imagine that some unethicalretailers will impose bogus charges under the facade of charging a sales."

(AG Amicus Brief in Loeffler, at AA 374.)

These concerns expressed by the Attorney General are now increased exponentially because the customer has no rights of recourse whatsoever under McClain. The Court of Appeal's opinion concedes as much:

> The retail pharmacies lack any financial incentive to challenge the Board's implementation of Regulation 1591.1 by seeking a refund, and the statutory remedies available to the customers-urging the Board to conduct an audit or filing a claim or lawsuit under the Administrative Procedure Act-while effective enough to satisfy due process, are nevertheless the practical equivalent of allowing them to tug (albeit persistently) at the Board's sleeve.

(Op. 28, emphasis added).

Contrary to the Court of Appeal's explanation, however, "tugging at a sleeve" does not satisfy due process.

HOW THS CASE PRESENTS GROUNDS FOR REVIEW

Although Javor has never been overruled, the Court of Appeal below interpreted Javor in such a restrictive manner as to effectively abolish the Javor -type remedy. It did so by imposing supposed "prerequisites" that no case, not even Javor itself, could possibly satisfy. It also expanded the "safe harbor" recognized in Loeffler (for UCL and CLRA claims) to become an all-encompassing "safe harbor" for all defendants for all claims:

> Judicial recognition of a right of customers to sue retailers when the Board has yet to determine whether a refund is due is also inconsistent with section 6901.5. . . . In Loeffler, our Supreme Court read this section as providing a "safe harbor" or "safe haven" for any retailer/taxpayer "vis-à-vis the consumer" if the retailer/taxpayer "remits reimbursement charges [it collects] to the Board. (Loeffler, supra, 58 Cal.4th at pp. 1100, 1103-1104, 1119.)

(Op. at 22 (emphasis added))

According to the opinion, the "safe harbor" even immunizes the SBE from liability on the *Javor*type remedy by blocking the first step in the process, which is to compel the retailer to file a tax refund claim with the SBE:

> If consumers can sue retailers to compel them to seek a refund from the Board, then the "safe harbor" from suit erected by section 6901.5 is no safe harbor at all. (Accord, Loeffler, at p. 1126 [noting conflict].

(Op. 22)

There is nothing in Loeffler to suggest that the" safe harbor" that it recognized was intended to bar initiation of a Javor-type remedy. On the contrary, this court stated in Loeffler that "[t]he integrity of the tax system and avoidance of unjust enrichment, possibly of the retailer, but more probably of the state, in certain circumstances may support a Javor-type remedy for consumers."

The Court of Appeal's opinion is in conflict with other controlling decisions of this court and of the United States Supreme Court besides Javor and Loeffler. The conflicted decisions include State v. Savings Union Bank & Trust Co. (1921) 186 Cal.294 (California's attempt to escheat customer money from a stakeholder bank without a procedure by which the rightful owner can assert a claim to recover the money is a violation of due process); Webb's Fabulous Pharmacies v. Beckwith (1980) 449 U.S. 155 [101 S.Ct. 446, 66 L.Ed.2d 358 (Florida statute providing that interest accruing on interpleader monies deposited with the clerk shall be deemed income of the clerk's office violates the Takings Clause of the Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution); and National Ice & Cold Storage Co. v. Pacific Fruit Express Co. (1938) 11 Cal.2d 283 (absent purchaser consent, either expressly or impliedly given, a statute authorizing retailers to collect sales tax reimbursement from customers is a violation of due process). Plenary review under California Rule of Court 8.500(b)(1) is required to resolve these conflicts and secure uniformity of decision.

Review is also required to settle questions of law in order to avoid a constitutional crisis for sales tax. Besides effectively abolishing the Javor remedy, the Court of Appeal's opinion rejected Petitioners' cause of action against the retailers for breach of the contractual agreement required by Civil Code §1656.1 in order for the retailer to collect sales tax reimbursement from the customer. The Court's ground for this ruling is somewhat ambiguous,[1] but probably is that the "safe harbor" bars the claim.

Civil Code §1656.1 is the only statutory authority for retailers to collect sales tax reimbursement from consumers, and makes such collection "depend[] solely upon the terms of the agreement of sale." However, §1656.1 creates "rebuttable presumptions" that the parties "agreed to the addition of sales tax reimbursement to the sales price . . . if sales tax reimbursement is shown on the sales check or other proof of sale." The effect of the Court of Appeal's ruling is to make §1656.1's "rebuttable presumption" of customer consent to pay sales tax reimbursement irrebuttable.

This court has once before ruled sales tax reimbursement unconstitutional under the Due Process clause in a situation where there was no basis for finding that customer's consent to paying sales tax reimbursement was "either expressly or impliedly given," National Ice & Cold Storage Co. v. Pacific Fruit Express Co. (1938) 11 Cal.2d 283, 290 ("National Ice").)

[1] See Op. 27 ("We reject the customers' first argument because, as explained above, the premise of their breach of contract claims is that the retail pharmacies wrongly collected sales tax reimbursement that was not due, yet they have no means in this lawsuit of establishing whether it was due.")

The Javor -type remedy and the cause of action against the retailers for breach of contractual agreement required by Civil Code §1656.1 may be the only legal recourse that survives Loeffler for customers who are overcharged sales tax reimbursement. By effectively abolishing those two forms of recourse, the Court of Appeal's opinion removes the only constitutional justifications for a retailer's right to collect reimbursement from its customer, given that the tax that is legally imposed on the retailer alone.

Under the Court of Appeal's "safe harbor" ruling, if sales tax reimbursement is shown on the sales check or other proof of sale, customers have no legal power to dispute the charge, no matter how clearly the sale is legally tax exempt. With customers having no power to dispute the charge, there is also no basis for presuming that customers agree with the charge. The consensual basis for the constitutionality of sales tax reimbursement that this court first suggested in National Ice is therefore destroyed. And, as this court held in National Ice, there is no other constitutional basis for customers being obligated to reimburse retailers for a tax obligation that is statutorily imposed exclusively upon retailers.

Additionally, Tax Code §6901.5 is the statutory requirement for retailers to remit excess sales tax reimbursement to the SBE. It only operates with respect to sales tax reimbursement that was "computed upon an amount that is not taxable or is in excess of the taxable amount." The conclusion is therefore inescapable that §6901.5 is not a taxation statute, precisely because the excess sales tax reimbursement funds governed by §6901.5 are, by definition, not owed as taxes. Rather, §6901.5 is an escheat statute.

Due process requires that an escheat be either a nonpermanent escheat "subject to the right of claimants to appear and claim the escheated property" and/or be accomplished by a judicial proceeding which, after notice satisfying due process standards, cuts off claimants permanently. (See pp. 29-30, infra.) After the Court of Appeal's opinion effectively abolished the Javor-type remedy, Tax Code §6901.5 immediately became a permanent escheat and unconstitutional for lack of any right in customers to claim the escheated funds that they were overcharged (much less a judicial proceeding to terminate their interest).

A future judicial constitutional invalidation of California's sales tax reimbursement regime as a result of the Court of Appeal's opinion would have severe economic consequences for California retailers. Unable to collect sales tax reimbursement from their customers to offset the sales tax liability imposed on retailers by Tax Code §6051, California retailers would experience considerable financial distress from having to absorb the sales tax themselves. That economic distress could spread throughout the State's economy and damage not only sales tax collections, but income tax and commercial property tax collections as well.

Fortunately, these events can be avoided by this court accepting review and restoring the law to what it was before the McClain ruling. This can be simply done. First, this court should hold that the "safe harbor" found by this court in Loeffler does not apply to a cause of action for breach of the express or presumed agreement required by Civil Code §1656.1 in order for a retailer to collect sales tax reimbursement. There are solid reasons why this is true as a matter of statutory interpretation.

The fact that Civil Code §1656.1 was enacted as an integral part of the 1978 overhaul of the tax code distinguishes Petitioner's breach of contract claim from the UCL and CLRA claims that were the subject of the "safe harbor" recognized in Loeffler. See Loeffler at 1126 ("The UCL cannot properly be interpreted to impose on retailers a duty with respect to sales tax that is contradicted by the statutory scheme governing the sales tax.") (Emphasis added.) Civil Code §1656.1, by contrast, is part of "the statutory scheme governing the sales tax." Immunizing retailers from liability for breaching the very contract that was enacted in order "to clarify that the incidence of the state sales tax is on retailers, not consumers" would seriously undermine the "statutory scheme governing the sales tax."

Rather, Civil Code §1656.1 must be harmonized with the Tax Code rather than be preempted by it. Any interpretation that would bar remedies for breach of the contract contemplated by Civil Code §1656.1 would effectively repeal §1656.1, and "[a]ll presumptions are against a repeal by implication." (State Dept. of Public Health v. Superior Court (2015) 60 Cal.4th 940, 955, 960-961, citations omitted.)

Second, this court should reject all of the supposed "prerequisites" for application of the Javor-style remedy that were found to exist by the Court of Appeal's opinion. The Javor-style remedy has been in existence for 43 years since it was devised by this court, and until the Court of Appeal's opinion, had done just fine without any restrictive "prerequisites" to prevent its usage. While the Javor-style remedy has only been sought in a handful of cases during those 43 years, it has nevertheless served a vital purpose in protecting Tax Code §6901.5 from unconstitutionality. Absent a functional Javor-type remedy, Tax Code §6901.5 is unconstitutional as a permanent escheat by the State of private property with no due process procedure by which the rightful owner (the customer) can assert a claim to recover its property. (See Section III et. seq., infra.)

Conversely, if this court were to deny review, there may be no opportunity for any other California appellate court to re-interpret the sales tax law so as to correct the constitutional infirmities injected by the McClain opinion. Absent a ruling by this court, if future cases raise the same constitutional defects in federal courts, those courts may look to the Court of Appeal's opinion as a binding interpretation of California law. That would serve to lock-in a statutory interpretation establishing that California's sales tax law violates the United States the Due Process and Takings clauses of the Fifth Amendment. Accordingly, it is essential that this court accept review so as to supplant the Court of Appeal's opinion with an interpretation of the sales tax law that does not run afoul of federal constitutional guarantees.

Finally, the Court of Appeal's opinion is in conflict with other controlling decisions of this court and of the United States Supreme Court besides Javor and Loeffler. The conflicted decisions include State v. Savings Union Bank & Trust Co. (1921) 186 Cal.294 (California's attempt to escheat customer money from a stakeholder bank without a procedure by which the rightful owner can assert a claim to recover the money is a violation of due process); Webb's Fabulous Pharmacies v. Beckwith (1980) 449 U.S. 155 [101 S.Ct. 446, 66 L.Ed.2d 358 (Florida statute providing that interest accruing on interpleader monies deposited with the clerk shall be deemed income of the clerk's office violates the Takings Clause of the Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution); and National Ice & Cold Storage Co. v. Pacific Fruit Express Co. (1938) 11 Cal.2d 283 (absent purchaser consent, either expressly or impliedly given, a statute authorizing retailers to charge customers for reimbursement of sales taxes imposed by law upon retailers is a violation of due process).

Plenary review under California Rule of Court 8.500(b)(1) is required to resolve these conflicts and to settle vital questions of law.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

In March 2000, Regulation 1591.1(b)(5) promulgated by the SBE went into effect, exempting the sale of glucose test strips and skin puncture lancets from sales tax. Despite this, California retailers continued to charge California's three million diabetics millions of dollars per year in "sales tax reimbursement." They contend they remit these proceeds to the SBE. The SBE has refused to consider refunding the wrongfully collected sums, resulting in the State being unjustly enriched by millions of dollars each year.

These lawsuits were brought on behalf of California diabetics who use blood glucose test strips to monitor their blood sugar levels to determine when they need to use insulin. First filed in December 2004. the cases were stayed while the Loeffler case was first pending before the appellate court, and then again while the Loeffler case was pending before this Court. The stay was lifted shortly after this Court's opinion in Loeffler issued. Plaintiffs filed an amended complaint, including a cause of action carefully tracking the remedy allowed by this Court in Javor.

The trial court sustained demurrers to Petitioners' operative complaint, and also denied Petitioners' request for leave to amend to state a constitutional Takings Clause claim against the SBE. The Court of Appeal affirmed on March 13, 2017, in an opinion certified for publication.

Petitioners are limiting this Petition to two of their causes of action: (1) the Fifth Cause of Action against all defendants for the equitable remedy devised by this court in Javor v. State Board of Equalization (1972) 12 Cal.3d 758 ("Javor"), and (2) the First Cause of Action against the retailer defendants for breach of the contractual agreement required by Civil Code §1656.1 in order for retailers to collect sales tax reimbursement from their customers. In addition, Petitioners seek review of the Court of Appeal's decision not to reverse the trial court's denial of leave amend (which amendment was identified to the trial court as being to allege a constitutional Takings Clause claim).

FILING OF PETITION FOR REHEARING AND HOW THE COURT OF APPEAL RULED

Petitioners filed a Petition for rehearing. The Court of Appeal responded on April 10, 2017 by denying rehearing and modifying two paragraphs of its opinion. One of the modifications dealt with Petitioners' constitutional Takings Claim. The other modification added footnote 9 to the opinion stating that the court declined to consider arguments "that appear nowhere in [Petitioners'] prior briefs..." One of the arguments identified as being new and not considered was Petitioners' claim that "denying them a remedy violates due process because the collection of sales tax reimbursement by retailers effects an 'escheat' to the state." (Order, 4/10/2017, p. 2).

The Court of Appeal was wrong in stating that Petitioners had not raised the "escheat" argument in their prior briefs. Escheat was a focus of Petitioners' Due Process and Takings Clause arguments in the trial court (AA 517) and in all of Appellants briefs' filed in the Court of Appeal (AOB 73-76; ARB 35-39; RP 20-21; 24; 26-36; and 40-43).

ARGUMENT

I. THE COURT OF APPEAL'S OPINION ADOPTS "PREREQUISITES" FOR THE JAVOR-STYLE REMEDY THAT NO CASE, NOT EVEN THE JAVOR CASE ITSELF, COULD EVER SATISFY, THEREBY EFFECTIVELY ABOLISHING THE JAVOR -TYPE REMEDY.

The Court of Appeal's opinion holds that there are certain "prerequisites" that a customer's case must meet to qualify for application of the Javor-type remedy. But by definition, no case, not even the Javor case itself, could ever satisfy these supposed prerequisites.

The Court of Appeal's opinion first held that Petitioners fail to qualify for the Javor-type remedy because they "have several other remedies available to them," pointing to Tax Code §§ 6481, 6483 and 7054. (Op. 20-21.) But those tax code sections apply equally to deficiency determinations with respect to any sales tax returns. If the mere existence of those sections disqualifies a customer from a Javor-type remedy, then no customer can ever qualify. Indeed, the Javor plaintiffs themselves could not have qualified for the remedy because all three sections were enacted prior to the Supreme Court's 1974 decision in Javor, and have remained materially unchanged since that time.

The Court of Appeal's opinion also identifies Government Code §§11340.6 and 11350 as being the source of "other remedies," namely to petition the Board under the Administrative Procedure Act to compel the Board to "adopt, amend or repeal" Regulation 1591.1 (b)(5) or to sue the Board for declaratory relief "as to the validity of" Regulation 1591.1. (Op. 21.)

Not only do these "other remedies" not allow the consumer to pursue a return of the already paid wrongful sales tax reimbursement, but, again, they would be present in every case to block every potential claim for a Javor remedy. Further, in this case, Regulation 1591.1(b)(5) is the Board Regulation that exempts sales of glucose test strips and lancets from the sales tax, and a cornerstone of Petitioners' case. Changing or challenging the validity of Regulation 1591.1(b)(5) is not Petitioners strategy.

The Court of Appeal's opinion next holds that Tax Code §6905, which forfeits and waives a tax refund claim that is not timely filed, is inconsistent with a Javor-type claim (Op. 21-22.) By definition, a Javor-type only arises when the retailer has refused or failed to file a claim for a tax refund and therefore must be judicially compelled to do so, so §6905 would defeat every potential every potential Javor.claim. Indeed, the Javor plaintiffs could not have qualified for the remedy because § 6905 was enacted in 1941, prior to the Supreme Court's 1974 decision in Javor, and has remained materially unchanged since that time.

The Court of Appeal's opinion next holds that f Tax Code §6901.5 is inconsistent with a Javor remedy. (Op. 22.) A Javor-type remedy against the SBE only arises when a customer claims that a retailer has collected excess sales tax reimbursement and remitted it to the SBE under §6901.5. Therefore, by definition Section 6901.5 is involved in every case, so no customer could ever qualify for a Javor-type remedy.

The Court Of Appeal's opinion also holds that a prerequisite to the Javor-type remedy is that the Board already has determined that "the person seeking the new tax refund remedy is entitled to a refund." (Op. 20.) If consumers are not entitled to pursue a Javor-type remedy unless the Board already has determined that they are entitled to a refund, but absent a Javor-type remedy, there is no occasion for the Board to make such a determination, then the Javor-type remedy will be a dead letter because the reasoning is circular.

Additionally, although not described by the Court of Appeal's opinion as being a "prerequisite," the Court of Appeal's opinion also applies a "safe harbor" to block the first step in the*Javor* process, which is to compel the retailer to file a tax refund claim with the SBE:

> If consumers can sue retailers to compel them to seek a refund from the Board, then the "safe harbor" from suit erected by section 6901.5 is no safe harbor at all.

(Op. 22)

Finally, it should be noted that under the Court of Appeal's opinion, failing to satisfy any one of the opinion's supposed "prerequisites" would disqualify a case for a Javor-type remedy. It is abundantly clear that no case could ever meet any of the tests, much less all of the them.

II. THE COURT OF APPEAL'S OPINION DESTROYS THE CONSENSUAL BASIS FOR THE CONSTITUTIONALITY OF SALES TAX REIMBURSEMENT

Unlike in Loeffler, which involved only UCL and CLRA claims (58 Cal.4th at 1123-24 ["we conclude that permitting plaintiffs to use the UCL or CLRA ..."]), Plaintiffs allege a breach of contract cause of action based on Civil Code §1656.1(a), which provides that "[w]hether a retailer may add sales tax reimbursement to the sales price of the tangible personal property sold at retail to a purchaser depends solely upon the terms of the agreement of sale." Section 1656.1(a) raises fundamental due process constitutional implications not present in Loeffler.

The Court of Appeal failed to recognize that by turning the "rebuttable" presumption into an irrebuttable one, while also de facto eliminating the Javor remedy, its opinion effectively abolished a constitutionally required counterbalance for California's sales tax reimbursement regimen. Without those rights of recourse, the collection of sales tax reimbursement becomes unconstitutional.

The basic structure of California's retail sales tax has always been dogged by constitutional concerns arising from the Legislature's initial decision[2] in 1933 to impose the sales tax on retailers rather than purchasers (as many other states have done[3]). If California had imposed the sales tax on purchasers and tasked retailers with the responsibility of collecting the tax and remitting the proceeds to the SBE, the collection and payment of sales tax would have been much the same as it is now. However, purchasers would be "taxpayers" with standing to file and prosecute tax refund claims against the SBE, and Petitioners' standing to obtain a tax refund from the SBE would not be an issue. That also would be consistent with C.C.P. §367's public policy favoring real-parties-in-interest. ("Every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, except as otherwise provided by statute").

But there was a countervailing consideration. In 1933, banks and insurance companies were exempt from California taxes beyond a few forms of tax that were specified to be "in lieu of all other taxes." A retail sale to one of these entities would be exempt from the new California sales

[2] "[I]t would have been within the power of the legislature to have imposed a tax upon either the retailer or the purchaser...." (National Ice & Cold Storage Co. v. Pacific Fruit Express Co. (1938) 11 Cal.2d 283, 290 ("National Ice").)

[3] See, e.g. Washington Rev. Code. (ARCW) § 82.08.050; Utah Code Ann,. § 59-12-103; Utah Administrative Code, R865-19S-2.

tax if the tax incidence were on the tax-exempt purchaser, but would be subject to sales tax if the incidence were on the non-exempt retailer. (AA 410.)

So instead of putting the tax incidence on purchasers, the Legislature put the tax incidence on retailers "for the privilege of selling tangible personal property." (Section 3 Retail Sales Tax Act of 1933, currently R&TC §6051.) However, the 1933 Act also provided that, "The tax hereby imposed shall be collected by the retailer from the consumer in so far as the same can be done..." (Former Section 8 1/2 Retail Sales Tax Act of 1933, codified as former Tax Code §6052.)

In 1938, however, this Court was faced with the following question: By what legal principle is it constitutional for the Tax Code to obligate a purchaser to reimburse a retailer for sales taxes that are legally levied upon the retailer? This Court answered that question by holding that there is no such legal principle, and that Section 4 of the Retail Sales Tax Act of 1933 was unconstitutional for lack of due process:

> [T]o baldly legislate that without, and in the absence of either due or any process of law, a legal debt that is owed by one person must be paid by another, is quite at variance with ordinary notions of that which may be termed the administration of justice. . . [A]ny . . .provision of the statute ... which purports either directly or indirectly to authorize the retailer to collect from or to charge to the purchaser ... the tax imposed upon its retailer ... is unconstitutional and consequently invalid.

National Ice at 291-292 (emphasis added).

However, this Court threw the SBE a life raft by which it could avoid unconstitutionality in future cases:

> However, such declaration of the law is not intended to indicate the illegality of authority which may be lodged in a retailer to "pass on" the tax to a purchaser with the latter's consent thereto, either expressly or impliedly given. That sort of arrangement between interested parties in such a sale is not here involved.

National Ice at 292 (emphasis added)..

Thus, the presence of customer consent "either expressly or impliedly given" became the cornerstone constitutional principal for retailers' ability to charge and collect sales tax reimbursement from customers. Absent customer consent, retailer collection of sales tax reimbursement would be no more constitutional than if the Legislature decreed that buyers of real property must reimburse the sellers for capital gains taxes that the sellers incur on the sale. Such shifting of the seller's tax liability to the purchaser might be acceptable as a negotiated term of the agreement of sale, but a statute to that effect would be a clear deprivation of property without due process of law. Oksner v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, (1964) 229 Cal. App. 2d 672, 684 ("Due process forbids the seizure of one man's property for satisfaction of the debt of another."); National Ice at 291 ("to baldly legislate that . . . a legal debt that is owed by one person must be paid by another, is quite at variance with ordinary notions of . . . the administration of justice.")

A consensual agreement by customers to pay sales tax reimbursement became even more necessary as a result of the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Diamond Nat'l Corp. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1976) 425 U.S. 268, 96 S. Ct. 1530. In a brief per curiam opinion, the court reversed the California Court of Appeal on the authority of First Agricultural Nat'l Bank v. State Tax Commissioner, (1968) 392 U.S. 339, 346-48; 88 S. Ct. 2173.

In First Agricultural, the U.S. Supreme Court had held unconstitutional Massachusetts' attempt to tax a retailer for sales to a national bank because the Massachusetts "sales tax...by its terms must be passed on to the purchaser" (i.e. the national bank that was tax-exempt under 12 U.S.C. §548). Several of the provisions of the Massachusetts Act that were determinative in First Agricultural had analogs in the California's Retail Sales Tax Act. It is therefore not surprising that in Diamond the U.S. Supreme Court found that in California, as in Massachusetts, the incidence of the sales tax was on consumers, not retailers, notwithstanding that Tax Code §6052 said the opposite. See Diamond at 268 ("We are not bound by the California court's contrary conclusion and hold that the incidence of the state and local sales taxes falls upon the national bank as purchaser and not upon the vendors.")

The Legislature responded to the potential loss of tax base caused by Diamond by enacting 1978 Senate Bill 472 as Stats. 1978, ch. 1211.

(Loeffler at 1117.) The nature of the statutory changes made by that bill and their motivation are well-described in Loeffler as follows:

> When a federal decision found that the California sales tax fell on a bank as a purchaser (see Diamond), the revision was considered necessary. The 1978 enactment clarified that the tax fell on the retailer "by removing from the code those provisions of law which have characteristics of laws which impose the tax upon the consumer.' . . . . All of these repealed provisions evidently were thought to create a danger that they might support the view that consumers bore the economic burden of the tax and therefore were the actual taxpayers.
> In their place, the Legislature added Civil Code section 1656.1, described above, permitting but not requiring the addition of reimbursement charges, designating the charges as a matter for a contractual agreement between seller and buyer, and permitting the retailer to absorb the tax.

(Loeffler at 1116-1117.)

Thus, the Legislature's goal in 1978 was to remove the State and the SBE from any role in determining whether a retailer may add sales tax reimbursement to the sales price by making it "a matter for a contractual agreement between seller and buyer." To further disentangle the SBE from sales tax reimbursement, the Legislature put the critical replacement statute in the Civil Code rather than the Tax Code.

The enactment of Civil Code §1656.1 was the polar opposite of an ill-conceived piece of legislation. The reduction in California's sales tax base as a result of the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Diamond was of great concern for the State and the SBE. Civil Code §1656.1 was crafted by the Legislature and the SBE to achieve a delicate balance between the rights of retailers and the rights of consumers. It begins by stating:

> Whether a retailer may add sales tax reimbursement to the sales price of the tangible personal property sold at retail to a purchaser depends solely upon the terms of the agreement of sale.

However, §1656.1 then creates a presumption in favor of the existence of an agreement by the consumer to pay sales tax reimbursement "if . . .sales tax reimbursement is shown on the sales check or other proof of sale." (Id., Sub. (a)(3).) But in the final adjustment, the last subsection states: "The presumptions created by this section are rebuttable presumptions." (Id. Sub. (d).)

Why did the Legislature enact a presumption at all? Why not just say "A retailer may add sales tax reimbursement to the sales price... if... sales tax reimbursement is shown on the sales check or other proof of sale"?

The answer is that such a formulation would make the purchaser automatically obligated to reimburse the retailer for the sale tax, to an even greater certainty than was the case at the time of Diamond, when the obligation was qualified by the phrase "in so far as the same can be done . . ." (Former Section 8 1/2 Retail Sales Tax Act of 1933, codified as former Tax Code §6052.) So in order in order to avoid another federal court decision like Diamond, the Legislature included a rebuttable presumption in Civil Code §1656.1 to act as a sort of "circuit breaker" to counter any argument that sales tax reimbursement is automatically imposed on customers, and therefore customers are the real taxpayers.

That same logic and rebuttable presumption did double duty by ensuring that the constitutional justification for sales tax reimbursement — purchaser agreement "either expressly or impliedly given" as per National Ice – would never be automatic (and therefore would always be deemed consensual rather that State-imposed).

Unfortunately, the 1978 Legislature did not anticipate that 39 years later the Court of Appeal would issue an opinion overriding its carefully crafted statute by applying a "safe harbor" to immunize retailers from all liability for breaching the contract specified in Civil Code §1656.1:

> Judicial recognition of a right of customers to sue retailers when the Board has yet to determine whether a refund is due is also inconsistent with section 6901.5. . . . In Loeffler, our Supreme Court read this section as providing a "safe harbor" or "safe haven" for any retailer/taxpayer "vis-à-vis the consumer" if the retailer/taxpayer "remits reimbursement charges [it collects] to the Board.

Op. at _ (emphasis added).

Under the Court of Appeal's "safe harbor" ruling, if sales tax reimbursement is shown on the sales check or other proof of sale, customers have no legal power to dispute the charge, no matter how clearly the sale is legally tax exempt. With customers having no power to dispute the charge, there is also no basis for presuming that customers agree with the charge. The consensual basis for the constitutionality of sales tax reimbursement that this court first suggested in National Ice is therefore destroyed. And, as this court held in National Ice, there is no other constitutional basis for customers being obligated to reimburse retailers for a tax obligation that is statutorily imposed exclusively upon retailers.

The result of the Court of Appeal's opinion, therefore, is that retailer collection of all sales tax reimbursement from customers (not just excess sales tax reimbursement) is rendered unconstitutional as a deprivation of property without due process of law.

III. BY EFFECTIVELY ABOLISHING THE JAVOR-TYPE REMEDY, THE COURT OF APPEAL'S OPINION MAKES TAX CODE §6901.5 UNCONSTITUTIONAL

There is no doubt that Tax Code §6901.5 is an escheat statute, not a taxation statute. Tax Code §6901.5 provides:

> When an amount represented by a person to a customer as constituting reimbursement for taxes due under this part is computed upon an amount that is not taxable or is in excess of the taxable amount. . . .

Tax Code §6901.5 (emphasis added).

Thus, §6901.5 only operates when sales tax reimbursement was "computed upon an amount that is not taxable or is in excess of the taxable amount." The conclusion is therefore inescapable that §6901.5 is not a taxation statute, precisely because the excess sales tax reimbursement funds governed by §6901.5 are, by definition, not owed as taxes.

When a retailer collects excess sales tax reimbursement from its customers, §6901.5 instructs the retailer to return the excess sales tax reimbursement to the customer "upon notification by the Board of Equalization or by the customer that such excess has been ascertained." Failing that (as is uniformly the case[4]) §6901.5 instructs that the amount "shall be remitted by [the retailer] to this state" whereupon it will be "credited by the board on any amounts due and payable [as sales tax] on the same transaction from the [retailer] and the balance, if any, shall constitute an obligation due from the [retailer] to this state." (Emphasis added). In other words, the State escheats from the retailer the amount by which the sales tax reimbursement exceeds any sales tax due from the retailer on the same transaction.

Most modern escheat statutes are only provisional, nonpermanent escheats because they are "subject to the right of claimants to appear and claim the escheated property." (Code Civ. Proc. 1300, subd. (c); Morris v. Chiang, (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 753, 756.) There are generally no constitutional concerns with nonpermanent escheats. See (2004) Harris v. Westly, 116 Cal. App. 4th 214 ("This case, however, does not involve

[4] Loeffler at 1120. ("Section 6901.5 provides no procedure by which consumers can require the Board to 'ascertain' whether excess reimbursement has in fact been charged, nor is there a statutory procedure by which the consumer can make certain that the retailer will be ordered to refund an excess amount to the consumer.)

permanent escheat to the state . . . Indeed, the statute is explicit in its provision to the contrary...We perceive no constitutional dimension to that deprivation under the circumstances.") Here, the Javor-type remedy provided such a "right of claimants [i.e. customers] to appear and claim the escheated property [i.e. excess sales tax reimbursement]." Tax Code §6901.5 was therefore a "nonpermanent escheat," at least over the period of the statute of limitations.

But the Court of Appeal's opinion effectively abolishes the Javor-type remedy by imposing supposed "prerequisites" that no case, not even Javor itself, could possibly satisfy. (See Section I, supra) It also changes the "rebuttable" presumption in Civil Code §1656.1 into an "irrebuttable" one. The Court of Appeal having eliminating the "right of claimants to appear and claim the escheated property," Tax Code §6901.5 immediately becomes a "permanent escheat" See Civ. Proc. §1300, subd. (d) ("'Permanent escheat means the absolute vesting in the state of title to property....") A permanent escheat "generally requires a judicial proceeding ... ." (Morris v. Chiang, supra at 756).

In the landmark case of State v. Savings Union Bank & Trust Co. (1921) 186 Cal. 294, the State contended that when money on deposit in a bank remained unclaimed for 20 or more years after the last deposit or withdrawal, it automatically, immediately and irrevocably escheated to the state under former Civil Code §1273 without any notice or judicial proceeding. The California Supreme Court emphatically rejected that interpretation of former Civil Code §1273, stating that it would be an unconstitutional "taking of property without due process of law":

> [T]he effect of the statute as it is claimed to be by the state would be to divest a person of his title without any proceeding against him for that purpose and would manifestly be a taking of property without due process of law.
> In view of . . . the fact that the statute would be utterly void if given the meaning attributed to it by the attorney-general, . . . the provision . . . must not be taken as intending to provide for an immediate escheat, but as providing that the same shall be taken over by the state as an escheat when so adjudged in the action so provided for."

(State v. Savings Union Bank at 300.)

In summary, due process requires that an escheat be either a nonpermanent escheat "subject to the right of claimants to appear and claim the escheated property" and/or be accomplished by a judicial proceeding which, after notice satisfying due process standards, cuts off claimants. After the Court of Appeal's opinion effectively abolished the Javor-type remedy, Tax Code §6901.5 satisfies neither of those tests, and accordingly is unconstitutional under the Due Process clause of the U.S. and California Constitutions. With no obligation on retailers to remit excess sales tax reimbursement that they collect from customers to the SBE, a spiral of events could occur that may undermine the integrity of the sales tax and damage California's economy.

IV. PETITIONERS COULD HAVE STATED A CONSTITUTIONAL CLAIM AGAINST THE SBE UNDER THE TAKINGS CLAUSE; THE COURT OF APPEAL ERRED BY NOT REVERSING THE TRIAL COURT FOR DENYING LEAVE TO AMEND.

After the trial court had announced its tentative ruling to sustain the demurrers, Petitioners' counsel asked for leave to amend to add a claim for "just compensation" under the Takings Clause , noting that such claim had not been ripe "as long as Javor was still in play" (RT, 2/24/2015, 643:19-644:3) and that lack of leave to amend could adversely effect the claims period. (Id. at 645:20-24.) The trial court, however, denied leave to amend (Id. at 646:7-10.)

The Court of Appeal's opinion holds that no Taking claim could be brought:

> [C]onsumers' payment of the sales tax reimbursement does not affect a 'taking' because the retailer is not a government entity [and] to the extent we focus on the Board's subsequent receipt of that money as part of the retailer's sales tax, it is not a 'taking' because 'taxes' and user fees are not 'takings.'"

(Op. 25.)

As to the first phrase of the above holding, it is common for escheats to involve two steps. The consumer transfers funds to the stakeholder (usually a bank), and when the account becomes inactive, the funds escheats non-permanently to the state. The fact that two steps are involved, or that the consumer does not directly pay the funds to the state, has never been a defense to a Takings claim. See, e.g. Cerajeski v. Zoeller, (2013)

735 F.3d 577, 582-83 (7th Cir., Posner J.) ("[A] state may not escheat property without a judicial or administrative determination that the property has been abandoned or is otherwise subject to escheat opinion. . . . The plaintiff is entitled to just compensation from the state").

As to the second phrase of the above holding, it would overturn 84 years of efforts by the Legislature and SBE to keep sales tax reimbursement separate from sales tax. If the SBE were ever to equate sales tax reimbursement with "part of retailer's sales tax," that separation would dissolve, and it would be undeniable that the customers, rather than the retailers, are the real taxpayers entitled to directly file tax refund claims with the SBE.

The state cannot have it both ways. The state cannot define sales tax reimbursement as a matter of private contract under Civil Code §1656.1 (when it suits the State's tax maximization goal of placing the tax incidence on retailers), and alternatively treat sales tax reimbursement as a "tax" (when it suits the State's purpose of avoiding paying just compensation under the Takings Clause).

This court set forth the standard of review when a demurrer has been sustained without leave to amend as follows:

> On appeal, "[w]hen a demurrer ... is sustained without leave to amend, we decide whether there is a reasonable possibility that the defect can be cured by amendment: if it can be, the trial court has abused its discretion and we reverse."

(Loeffler at 1100.)

The trial court abused its discretion here and the Court of Appeal erred by not reversing on that basis.

For the foregoing reasons, the Petition for Review should be granted.

A customer buys skin puncture lancets and test strips used by diabetics to test blood glucose levels from a retail pharmacy store like CVS or Walgreens. The retail pharmacy is the one obligated to pay sales tax to the State of California (Rev. & Tax. Code, § 6051),[1] and accordingly charges the customer a "sales tax reimbursement" to cover the cost of the sales tax and remits that amount to the state. If the retail pharmacy subsequently believes no sales tax is owed, it—as the taxpayer—can file an administrative claim for a refund with the state Board of Equalization (the Board) and challenge any adverse ruling in court. (§§ 6901 & 6932.) But the retail pharmacy usually has no financial incentive to pursue such a remedy because any refund it obtains from the Board must be passed back to the customer. (§ 6901.5; Decorative Carpets, Inc. v. State Board of Equalization (1962) 58 Cal.2d 252, 254-255 (Decorative Carpets).) What is more, and as our Supreme Court recently reaffirmed in Loeffler v. Target Corp. (2014) 58 Cal.4th 1081, 1123-1124 (Loeffler), the customer is not the taxpayer and thus cannot herself seek a refund from the Board.

May the customer obtain a court order compelling the retail pharmacy to file an administrative refund claim with the Board? Our Constitution strictly limits refund actions to those "provided by [our] Legislature" (Cal. Const., art. XIII, § 32), and no such statutory remedy exists. However, our Supreme Court in Javor v. State Board of Equalization (1974) 12 Cal.3d 790, 802 (Javor) held that the Legislature's authority in this regard is not exclusive and that courts retain a residual power to fill remedial gaps by fashioning tax refund remedies in "unique circumstances." Loeffler had no occasion to define those "unique circumstances." (Loeffler, supra, 58 Cal.4th at pp. 1101, 1133-1134.)

This case squarely presents this unanswered question. We conclude that a court may create a new tax refund remedy—and, accordingly, that the requisite "unique circumstances" exist—only if (1) the person seeking the new tax refund remedy has no statutory tax refund remedy available to it, (2) the tax refund remedy sought is not inconsistent with existing tax refund remedies, and (3) the Board has already determined that the person seeking the new tax refund remedy is entitled to a refund, such that the refusal to create that remedy will unjustly enrich either the taxpayer/retailer or the Board. Here, a group of customers filed a class action predicated on their ability to obtain an order compelling the retail pharmacies to file an administrative claim with the Board seeking a refund of the sales tax paid for skin puncture lancets and glucose test strips. Because the Revenue and Taxation Code does not provide for this remedy and because they have not established any of the three prerequisites to the exercise of the judicial residual power to fashion new remedies, the trial court correctly sustained demurrers to all of the claims in the customers' operative complaint without leave to amend. We consequently affirm the judgment below.

FACTS AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

I. Facts

Plaintiffs and appellants Michael McClain, Avi Feigenblatt, and Gregory Fisher (collectively, customers) each bought skin puncture lancets and glucose test strips from retail pharmacy stores owned and/or operated by defendants and respondents Sav-On Drugs, Gavin Herbert Company, Longs Drug Stores Corporation, Longs Drug Stores California, Inc., Rite Aid Corporation, Walgreen Co., Target Corporation, Albertson's Inc., The Vons Companies, Inc., Vons Food Services, Inc., and Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. (collectively, the retail pharmacies). Skin puncture lancets (or lancets) and glucose test strips are used by persons living with diabetes to draw their blood and test its glucose level, which is critical to knowing when to inject insulin to reduce their glucose levels. When the customers purchased lancets and test strips from the retail pharmacies, the retail pharmacies charged them "sales tax" on those items. The retail pharmacies subsequently remitted the money they collected as sales tax to the Board.

II. Procedural History

In the operative fourth amended complaint filed in 2014,[2] the customers sued the retail pharmacies and the Board[3] for a refund of the "sales tax" they paid for lancets and test strips, alleging that these items have been exempt from sales tax since March 10, 2000, the date on which the Board made effective California Code of Regulations, title 18, section 1591.1, subdivision (b)(5) (Regulation 1591.1). This complaint sought to certify a class comprised of "all persons who were charged by and paid one or more of the [retail pharmacies] a sales tax on glucose test strips or skin puncture lancets in California when such should not have been charged."

2 This litigation was initiated by different customers in two separate lawsuits filed in December 2004, and January 2005, the first seeking a refund for sales tax paid on lancets, and the second seeking a refund for sales tax paid on test strips. The current customers were subsequently substituted in as the lead plaintiffs.

3 Although the Board is not listed in the caption of the operative complaint, the Board is named in that complaint's claim for declaratory and injunctive relief, and the Board has appeared and actively litigated the demurrer that is the subject of this appeal. We consequently conclude that although the Board was initially brought into this litigation when the retail pharmacies filed cross-complaints against it for indemnity and declaratory relief, it is also now a defendant as to the claim for injunctive and declaratory relief in the main action.

The operative complaint alleges that the retail pharmacies collected sales tax reimbursement for lancets and test strips when no sales tax was due on these items and that this conduct (1) breached an implied term of the contract that is deemed by statute to exist whenever a retailer collects a sales tax reimbursement from a customer under Civil Code section 1656.1 and also breached the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing; (2) constituted an unlawful, unfair and/or fraudulent business practice and thereby violates the unfair competition law (UCL) (Bus. & Prof. Code, § 17200 et seq.); (3) constituted negligence; and (4) violated the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code, § 1750 et seq.) by misrepresenting the taxability of those items. The operative complaint further seeks declaratory and injunctive relief compelling the retail pharmacies to prosecute a tax refund claim with the Board and the Board to award such a refund.

The retail pharmacies and the Board demurred to the operative complaint. Following briefing, the trial court issued an oral ruling sustaining the demurrers to all of the claims in the operative complaint without leave to amend. The court reasoned that Loeffler, supra, 58 Cal.4th 1081 held that a customer could not seek a tax refund of sales tax from a retailer; that Javor, supra, 12 Cal.3d 790 allowed a customer to seek a refund of sales tax where the Board had already decided the question of taxability and concluded that a refund was due; and that "[t]his case is more like Loeffler than Javor" because the taxability of lancets and test strips was "very hotly in dispute."

Following entry of judgment, the customers filed this timely appeal.

DISCUSSION

I. Pertinent Legal Principles

A. Relevant tax law

1. Sales tax generally

In California, retailers are generally required to pay the state a sales tax on any "tangible personal property" they sell "at retail." (§ 6051; Loeffler, supra, 58 Cal.4th at p. 1103 ["under California's sales tax law, the taxpayer is the retailer, not the consumer"]; De Aryan v. Akers (1939) 12 Cal.2d 781, 783 [same].) Retailers pay the sales tax as a percentage of their "gross receipts" (§ 6051), and it is rebuttably presumed that all "gross receipts" are subject to the tax (§ 6091). Retailers pay the sales tax they owe on a quarterly basis. (§§ 6451-6459; State Bd. of Equalization v. Superior Court (1985) 39 Cal.3d 633, 640.)

2. Collection of sales tax reimbursement from the customer

Although retailers were in the past required to collect the money they had to pay as sales tax from their customers (former § 6052),[4] our Legislature altered that approach after the United States Supreme Court held that a retailer's mandatory collection of sales tax from customers rendered the customer the de facto taxpayer. (Diamond National v. State Equalization Bd. (1976) 425 U.S. 268, 268 [96 S.Ct. 1530, 47 L.Ed.2d 780].) Under our

4 Many counties and municipalities still employ such mechanisms. (E.g., Andal v. City of Stockton (2006) 137 Cal.App.4th 86, 93-95 (Andal) [so noting, and holding that retailer who collects such fees may seek a refund]; TracFone Wireless, Inc. v. County of Los Angeles (2008) 163 Cal.App.4th 1359, 1361-1365 (TracFone) [same]; Sipple v. City of Hayward (2014) 225 Cal.App.4th 349, 358-362 (Sipple) [same].)

Legislature's current approach, it is up to each retailer to decide—as a matter of contract with its customers—whether to charge its customers a "sales tax reimbursement to the sales price" for items subject to the sales tax, or whether to pay the sales tax itself. (Civ. Code, § 1656.1, subd. (a).)[5] If a retailer "show[s]" a charge for sales tax on the receipt or "other proof of sale," or otherwise notifies a customer that it has or will charge sales tax, it is rebuttably presumed that the retailer and customer have contractually agreed that the retailer is collecting a sales tax reimbursement from the customer. (Civ. Code, § 1656.1, subds. (a) & (d).)

3. Pertinent exemptions

The retail sale of many items of tangible personal property is exempt from the sales tax. (§§ 6351-6380 [exemptions from sales and use taxes], 6381-6396 [exemptions from sales tax].) Since 1961, the sale of "medicines" has been exempt from sales tax if "[p]rescribed for the treatment of a human being by a person authorized to prescribe the medicines, and dispensed on prescription filled by a registered pharmacist in accordance with law." (§ 6369, subd. (a)(1).) A few years later, in 1963, our Legislature declared "[i]nsulin and insulin syringes" exempt from the sales tax if they were "furnished by a registered pharmacist to a person for treatment of diabetes as directed by a physician." (Id., subd. (e).) On March 10, 2000, the Board promulgated

5 The retailer's decision affects the amount of the sales tax to be collected: If the retailer pays the tax itself, it owes sales tax on the full amount charged for the item; if the retailer charges its customer a "sales tax reimbursement," it owes sales tax on the amount charged for the item less the reimbursement amount collected. (§ 6012, subd. (c)(12).)

Regulation 1591.1, which expanded this statutory exemption from the sales tax to reach "[g]lucose test strips and skin puncture lancets" if they were "furnished by a registered pharmacist [and] used by a diabetic patient to determine his or her own blood sugar level . . . in accordance with a physician's instructions." (Cal. Code Regs., tit. 18, § 1591.1, subd. (b)(5); see generally § 7051 [conferring upon Board the power to "prescribe, adopt, and enforce rules and regulations relating to the administration and enforcement" of the sales tax].) The Board expanded the sales tax exemption to these additional items because they "are an integral and necessary active part of the use of insulin and insulin syringes" expressly exempted by statute. (Cal. Code Regs., tit. 18, § 1591.1, subd. (b)(5).)

B. Relevant statutory tax refund procedures

1. For retailers

If a retailer believes it has paid the state sales tax "in excess of the amount legally due" (§ 6901), the retailer—as the taxpayer—has two options available to it by statute.

First, the retailer can file an administrative claim with the Board for a refund of any amount "not required to be paid." (§ 6901.) It has three years from the last day of the quarter in which it is seeking a refund to file such an administrative claim. (§ 6902, subd. (a).) If and only if the Board declines to issue a refund, the retailer may challenge that denial in court if it files suit "[w]ithin 90 days" of the Board's mailing the notice of denial. (§§ 6932 & 6933; State Bd. of Equalization v. Superior Court (1980) 111 Cal.App.3d 568, 571 (State Bd. of Equalization) ["pending completion of . . . administrative proceedings [before the Board], [the] court lacks jurisdiction"].) Requiring the retailer to litigate its refund claim before the Board "in the first instance" is designed to "obtain the benefit of the Board's expertise, permit it to correct mistakes, and save judicial resources." (Loeffler, supra, 58 Cal.4th at pp. 1103, 1127.) If a refund is ordered (either by the Board or in subsequent judicial review), the retailer can either "return[]" the corresponding sales tax reimbursement it collected to "the customer" or leave the funds with the state. (§ 6901.5.)

Second, the retailer can elect to waive its right to a refund by declining to file a timely claim for administrative review. (§ 6905.)

2. For customers

If the customer believes it has paid a sales tax reimbursement for items on which no sales tax is due, the customer has no statutory tax refund available to her—either administrative or judicial—against the Board or the retailer. (See §§ 6901-6909 [no administrative refund procedure for person who did not "collect" or "pa[y]" the tax], 6931-6937 [no lawsuit "unless a claim for refund . . . has been duly filed"]; Loeffler, supra, 58 Cal.4th at pp. 1092, 1133 [customer may not sue the retailer for excess sales tax reimbursement]; Javor, supra, 12 Cal.3d at p. 800 [customer has no "direct cause of action against the Board for . . . erroneously collected sales tax reimbursements"]; see generally Delta Air Lines, Inc. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1989) 214 Cal.App.3d 518, 526 (Delta) ["Generally, persons who have not paid the tax in question are barred from bringing suits for refund of that tax"].)

C. Law governing demurrers and their review on appeal

In reviewing an order sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend, we must ask (1) whether the demurrer was properly sustained, and (2) whether leave to amend was properly denied.

The first question requires us to "'"determine whether [that] complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action."'" (Centinela Freeman Emergency Medical Associates v. Health Net of California, Inc. (2016) 1 Cal.5th 994, 1010 (Centinela Freeman), quoting Zelig v. County of Los Angeles (2002) 27 Cal.4th 1112, 1126.) In undertaking this task, we accept as true all "'"material facts properly pleaded"'" and consider any materials properly subject to judicial notice; we disregard any "'"contentions, deductions or conclusions of fact or law"'" set forth in the operative complaint. (Ibid.; Mitchell v. State Dept. of Public Health (2016) 1 Cal.App.5th 1000, 1007.) We independently review the operative complaint and independently decide whether it states viable causes of action. (Lee v. Hanley (2015) 61 Cal.4th 1225, 1230.) The second question requires us to decide whether "'"there is a reasonable possibility that the defect [in the operative complaint] can be cured by amendment . . . ."'" (Centinela Freeman, at p. 1010.)

II. The Demurrer Was Properly Sustained

The premise of every claim in the customers' operative complaint is that the retail pharmacies erred in collecting sales tax reimbursement on lancets and test strips at a time when they were exempt from sales tax. Accordingly, the customers cannot state a cause of action unless they can establish their entitlement to a refund. This raises the preliminary procedural question that lies at the heart of this case: Can the customers seek a refund of the amount they paid as sales tax reimbursement through the lawsuit they have filed?

Relying on Javor, supra, 12 Cal.3d 790, the customers argue that this lawsuit is a viable means for seeking a refund of the sales tax reimbursement they paid for lancets and test strips.

Javor, they argue, held that customers who wrongly paid the sales tax reimbursement could obtain injunctive relief compelling retailers to file administrative claims with the Board to obtain a sales tax refund that could be passed back to the customers. (Id. at pp. 802-803.) This result, the customers urge, preserves the Board's ability to decide the taxability question in the first instance and prevents the state from being unjustly enriched by retaining sales tax to which it is not entitled. The retail pharmacies and the Board respond that the remedy sanctioned in Javor is limited to situations in which the Board has already determined that a refund is due and in which the newly created tax refund remedy would not create inconsistencies with existing tax refund statutes; both prerequisites, the retail pharmacies and Board urge, are absent. The availability of a judicially created remedy to supplement existing statutory remedies is a question of law that turns in part on questions of statutory interpretation; accordingly, our review is de novo. (City of San Diego v. Board of Trustees of California State University (2015) 61 Cal.4th 945, 956 [questions of law reviewed de novo]; Department of Health Care Services v. Office of Administrative Hearings (2016) 6 Cal.App.5th 120, 140-141 [statutory interpretation is a question of law].)

A. Governing law

Our state Constitution expressly entrusts to our Legislature the power to regulate post-payment actions for refunds. Specifically, article XIII, section 32 provides: "After payment of a tax claimed to be illegal, an action may be maintained to recover the tax paid, with interest, in such manner as may be provided by the Legislature." (Italics added; see also Masi v. Nagle (1992) 5 Cal.App.4th 608, 611 ["The Constitution . . . grants the power to the Legislature to prescribe the manner of proceeding in tax cases"].)[6] "This constitutional limitation rests on the premise that strict legislative control over the manner in which tax refunds may be sought is necessary so that governmental entities may engage in fiscal planning based on expected tax revenues." (Woosley v. State of California (1992) 3 Cal.4th 758, 789 (Woosley); Sprint Telephony PCS, L.P. v. Board of Equalization (2015) 238 Cal.App.4th 871, 883 (Sprint Telephony).)

This constitutional mandate has two necessarily implied corollaries. First, the "[a]dministrative tax refund procedures [enacted by the Legislature] are to be strictly enforced"; "substantial compliance" with those procedures will not do. (McCabe v. Snyder (1999) 75 Cal.App.4th 337, 344; Sprint Telephony, supra, 238 Cal.App.4th at p. 883; IBM Personal Pension Plan v. City and County of San Francisco (2005) 131 Cal.App.4th 1291, 1299 (IBM).) Second, and most pertinent here, courts may not "expand[] the methods for seeking tax refunds expressly provided by the Legislature." (Woosley, supra, 3 Cal.4th at p. 792; Kuykendall v. State Bd. of Equalization (1994) 22 Cal.App.4th 1194, 1203 (Kuykendall).)

However, this second corollary is not an absolute one and courts have on occasion recognized "equitable exceptions" in

6 The Constitution also prohibits any pre-payment challenges to tax collection, establishing a "pay first, sue later" rule that guarantees the steady collection of taxes and thus the uninterrupted conduct of the government's business that relies on that steady stream of tax revenue. (E.g., City of Anaheim v. Superior Court (2009) 179 Cal.App.4th 825, 827 (City of Anaheim).)

"certain unique circumstances." (IBM, supra, 131 Cal.App.4th at p. 1305, fn. 16.)

The first case to do so was Decorative Carpets, supra, 58 Cal.2d 252. There, a retailer selling carpet sought a tax refund of the sales tax from the Board. It was determined in a tax refund suit between the retailer/taxpayer and the Board that the retailer was entitled to that refund. The retailer nevertheless declared its intention to keep the refund for itself and not to return it to its customers, even though the retailer had charged them a sales tax reimbursement. (Id. at pp. 253-254.) The Board balked at issuing the refund, arguing that it would "unjustly enrich[]" the retailer at its customers' expense. (Id. at p. 254.) Our Supreme Court in Decorative Carpets agreed, holding that the Board's "vital interest in the integrity of the sales tax" gave it the authority to "insist as a condition of refunding overpayments to [the retailer] that [the retailer] discharge its trust obligations to its customers" by refunding to them the corresponding sales tax reimbursement they had paid. (Id. at p. 255.)

The next case was Javor, supra, 12 Cal.3d at page 790. There, the Board "admitted" that a recent retroactive repeal of the federal excise tax on motor vehicles entitled car dealers, as retailers, to a partial refund of the sales tax because the federal excise tax had been included in the price of the cars on which sales tax had been assessed. (Id. at pp. 794, 801-802.) The Board went so far as to promulgate rules to effectuate these refunds. (Ibid.) When car dealers did not apply for the tax refund money the Board had set aside, the customers themselves sued to compel the retailers to do so. (Id. at pp. 795-796, 802.) Javor held that this judicially created remedy—a lawsuit by customers to compel retailers to file administrative claims for refunds and pass those refunds back to the customers—was appropriate "under the unique circumstances of this case." (Id. at pp. 797-803.) In reaching this conclusion, our Supreme Court placed weight on the facts that the Legislature had "provide[d] no procedure by which [the customers] [could] claim the refund themselves" (id. at p. 797); that its newly fashioned remedy was "consonant with existing statutory procedures" (id. at pp. 800, 802); and, drawing on Decorative Carpets, supra, 58 Cal.2d 252, that the newly fashioned remedy was necessary—given that the retailers themselves had "no particular incentive to request the refund" (because they would act solely as a pass-through for the refund money)—to ensure that the state would not be "unjustly enriched" by getting to keep the admittedly erroneous sales tax revenue (Javor, at pp. 800-802).

Although Decorative Carpets dealt with a "greedy" retailer and Javor dealt with unmotivated retailers, both cases share three commonalities that, in our view, define the "unique circumstances" to which Javor alludes and that are prerequisites to the judicial recognition of any new tax refund remedy. First, in both Decorative Carpets and Javor, the customers had no available statutory tax refund remedy. (Decorative Carpets, supra, 58 Cal.2d at pp. 255-256; Javor, supra, 12 Cal.3d at p. 797; see also Loeffler, supra, 58 Cal.4th at p. 1114 [noting that customers in Javor had "no direct statutory provision for . . . refunds"]; cf. State Bd. of Equalization, supra, 111 Cal.App.3d at p. 571 [declining to recognize new remedy because the "real party . . . does not lack a [statutory tax refund] remedy"].) Second, in both Decorative Carpets and Javor, the judicially crafted remedies were "consonant" with the statutory tax refund procedures that our Legislature did provide.

(Decorative Carpets, at p. 255; Javor, at pp. 800, 802; accord, Kuykendall, supra, 22 Cal.App.4th at pp. 1204-1205 [noting that the "equity" of judicially created remedies "will defer to statute"].) Lastly, in both Decorative Carpets and Javor, there had been a precursor determination—either by the Board on its own volition or through its acquiescence to a court ruling in a tax refund action between the retailer/taxpayer and the Board—that a tax refund was due and owing. (Decorative Carpets, at p. 254; Javor, at pp. 794, 802.) Such a determination left no question that the court's refusal to fashion a new remedy would result in either the retailer (in Decorative Carpets) or the state (in Javor) keeping money that the customers had paid as sales tax reimbursement and to which the customers were unequivocally entitled. And it was the certainty of this unjust enrichment that offended the Board's "vital interest in the integrity of the sales tax" and warranted judicial intervention. (Decorative Carpets, at pp. 254-255; Javor, at pp. 800-803.) Limiting a court's authority to fashion new tax remedies to situations involving all three of these requirements specifically reinforces the constitutional mandate, described above, that the Legislature have primacy in fixing the procedures by which tax refunds are obtained. (Cal. Const., art. XIII, § 32.)

The customers in this case do not dispute the necessity of the first two prerequisites, but dispute the third and offer several reasons why courts should have the power to fashion new tax refund remedies even when the entitlement to that refund is yet to be decided.

To begin, they assert that Javor itself disclaims any requirement of a prior determination that the tax refund is due and owing because, at one point, Javor explains that the customers there sought an order "to compel defendant retailers to make refund applications to the Board and in turn to require the Board to respond to these applications by paying into court all sums, if any, due defendant retailers." (Javor, supra, 12 Cal.3d at p. 802, italics added.) The customers argue that the phrase "if any" means that the retailers' entitlement to a refund was still an open question in Javor. They are wrong. Javor makes clear that "[t]he Board ha[d] admitted that it must pay these refunds to retailers" (ibid.); the Court's use of the phrase "if any" simply acknowledged that some retailers might not have sold cars for which a refund is due—not that there were lingering questions about whether, as a legal matter, a refund was due.

Next, the customers argue that Javor's "unique circumstances" exist whenever a court is confronted with a situation involving a "legal taxpayer" who has the right but no incentive to seek a refund (here, the retail pharmacies) and an "economic taxpayer" who has the incentive but not the right to seek a refund (here, the customers). As the customers frankly acknowledge, however, this division of "taxpayer" status is an inherent feature of "the peculiar structure of California's retail sales tax" law, making that circumstance ubiquitous—not unique. More to the point, if courts could fashion new tax refund remedies simply because the Revenue and Taxation Code does not label the customer as the taxpayer, our Constitution's directive that the Legislature be the branch primarily charged with "provid[ing]" tax refund remedies would be rendered all but meaningless. (Cal. Const., art. XIII, § 32.) The customers urge that the risk to the state's coffers by virtue of new tax refund remedies is minimal given the statutory presumptions that customers agree to pay sales tax reimbursement (§ 1656.1, subd.

(a)) and that all of a retailer's gross receipts are subject to the sales tax (§ 6051). But the affront to the constitutional mandate stems from the judicial creation of new tax refund remedies, whether or not the use of those remedies ultimately leads to a refund.

The customers further cite a number of cases in which courts have allowed one party to file a derivative action for another. These cases fall into three broad categories, each of increasing irrelevance. The first is Delta, supra, 214 Cal.App.3d 518. There, the Court of Appeal held that an airline that paid sales tax reimbursement to a retailer for fuel could sue for a sales tax refund, even though it was not the taxpayer. (Id. at pp. 526-528.) In so holding, the court cited Javor and ruled that the case involved a "unique circumstance" authorizing judicial recognition of a new remedy of a direct lawsuit for a refund—namely, that California's tax statutes "regard[] common carriers such as Delta as retailers as well as purchasers." (Delta, at p. 528) Indeed, Delta expressly distinguished common carriers from "ordinary purchasers or consumers." (Id. at p. 526.) The customers here are ordinary consumers, not common carriers. The second category involves cases in which a retailer who collected county or municipal taxes from consumers was held to have standing to sue for a refund, even though the retailer was not technically the taxpayer. (See Andal, supra, 137 Cal.App.4th at pp. 93-95; TracFone, supra, 163 Cal.App.4th at pp. 1364-1365; Sipple, supra, 225 Cal.App.4th at pp. 358-362.) In so holding, these cases declined to recognize a "sharp distinction between a 'taxpayer' and a 'tax collector'" or to follow a "strict rule denying standing in all circumstances to 'tax collectors.'" (Sipple, at p. 359.) These cases are doubly irrelevant because they deal with the standing of a retailer who is a tax collector and not the standing of a consumer who is neither a tax collector nor a taxpayer, and because they deal with local taxes and thus are not constrained by article XIII, section 32's mandate which, as noted above, does require "strict" construction of tax refund statutes. (Howard Jarvis Taxpayers Assn. v. City of La Habra (2001) 25 Cal.4th 809, 822, fn. 5 [art. XIII, § 32 does not apply to "local governments"]; City of Anaheim, supra, 179 Cal.App.4th at pp. 830-831 [same].) The last category involves the right of a limited partner to file a derivative action on behalf of a limited partnership. (Wallner v. Parry Professional Bldg., Ltd. (1994) 22 Cal.App.4th 1446, 1449-1450.) Because it arises in a different context and involves a different statutory scheme, it is irrelevant.

The customers lastly contend that limiting judicially created remedies to cases in which there has been a prior determination that a tax refund is due will lead to absurd results. We agree that courts are loathe to interpret the law in a way that yields absurd results (John v. Superior Court (2016) 63 Cal.4th 91, 96), but disagree with the customers' prognostications. The customers assert that if consumers can sue for a tax refund only if there is a prior determination that a refund is due, then the same must be true for retailers seeking a refund from the Board, which will make it nearly impossible for retailers to obtain a tax refund. But the conclusion of this argument does not flow from its premise. The reason why a prior determination is required for consumers is because they are asking the court to create a new tax refund remedy when none exists by statute in order to avoid certain unjust enrichment; that reason has no application to retailers, who are authorized by statute to seek administrative and then judicial relief. The customers also argue the Board is not infallible because its rulings are sometimes overturned, such that placing limits on the power of courts to fashion new tax refund remedies makes it more possible for the Board's incorrect interpretations to go unreviewed. However, the question before us is to define the conditions that must be satisfied before the judiciary may fashion tax refund remedies notwithstanding our Constitution's primary commitment of defining remedies with the Legislature; it is not to afford maximum opportunities for judicial review. Moreover, retailers still have the right to directly challenge the Board's rulings and, as we discuss below, consumers have a more diluted right to do so.

B. Application

As explained above, a court may create a new tax refund remedy—and, accordingly, Javor's "unique circumstances" exist—only if (1) the person seeking the new tax refund remedy has no statutory tax refund remedy available, (2) the tax refund remedy sought is not inconsistent with existing tax refund remedies, and (3) the Board has already determined that the person seeking the new tax refund remedy is entitled to a refund, such that the refusal to create that remedy will unjustly enrich either the taxpayer/retailer or the Board. The trial court in this case ruled that it could not fashion a new judicial remedy to allow the customers to attack the Board's collection of sales tax on lancets and test strips. This ruling was correct because none of the three prerequisites is present in this case.

First, the customers do not have a statutory right to directly file for a refund of the sales tax from the Board or for a refund of sales tax reimbursement from the retailers, but they are not remedy-less. In fact, they have several other remedies available to them. They may urge the Board to initiate an audit of the retail pharmacies' practices in collecting sales tax or to conduct a deficiency determination of the retail pharmacies' sales tax payments (§§ 6481, 6483 & 7054; Loeffler, supra, 58 Cal.4th at pp. 1103-1104, 1123 [noting that "consumers who believe they have been charged excess reimbursement . . . may complain to the Board, which may in turn initiate an audit" or a "deficiency determination"].) They can, as "interested person[s]," petition the Board under the Administrative Procedure Act to compel the Board to "adopt[], amend[], or repeal" Regulation 1591.1, subdivision (b)(5) and the collection of sales tax under that regulation. (Gov. Code, § 11340.6; Loeffler, at p. 1123.) And they can, as "interested person[s]," sue the Board under the Administrative Procedure Act, for declaratory relief "as to the validity of" Regulation 1591.1. (Gov. Code, § 11350; Loeffler, at p. 1123.)

Second, judicial recognition of a right of customers to sue retailers and the Board for a sales tax refund when the Board has yet to determine whether any refund is due is inconsistent with at least two provisions of the Revenue and Taxation Code. It is inconsistent with section 6905. That section allows retailers to waive their right to seek a tax refund; if consumers can compel a retailer to seek a refund when it would rather waive it, the retailer's right to waiver would be negated. (Loeffler, supra, 58 Cal.4th at p. 1129 [so noting].) The consumers assert that the retailers' power to waive their right to a refund is irrelevant because the retailers' power to collect sales tax reimbursement from consumers is a matter of contract under Civil Code section 1656.1. But the contractual nature of the right to collect sales tax reimbursement in no way affects the fact that a judicial remedy compelling a retailer to seek a refund overrides a retailer's election not to seek one.

Judicial recognition of a right of customers to sue retailers when the Board has yet to determine whether a refund is due is also inconsistent with section 6901.5. That section requires a retailer that obtains from the Board a sales tax refund collected from its customers to do one of two things: (1) return that money to the customers once its entitlement to the refund "has been ascertained"; or (2) leave that money with the state. (§ 6901.5; see also Cal. Code Regs., tit. 18, § 1700, subd. (b)(1) [containing identical language].)[7] In Loeffler, our Supreme Court read this section as providing a "safe harbor" or "safe haven" for any retailer/taxpayer "vis-à-vis the consumer" if the retailer/taxpayer "remits reimbursement charges [it collects] to the Board." (Loeffler, supra, 58 Cal.4th at pp. 1100, 1103-1104, 1119.) If consumers can sue retailers to compel them to seek a refund from the Board, then the "safe harbor" from suit erected by section 6901.5 is no safe harbor at all. (Accord, Loeffler, at p. 1126 [noting conflict].) Indeed, the customers concede as much when

7 In pertinent part, this provision provides: "When an amount represented by a person to a customer as constituting reimbursement for taxes due under this part is computed upon an amount that is not taxable or is in excess of the taxable amount and is actually paid by the customer to the person, the amount so paid shall be returned by the person to the customer upon notification by the Board of Equalization or by the customer that such excess has been ascertained. In the event of his or her failure or refusal to do so, the amount so paid, if knowingly or mistakenly computed by the person upon an amount that is not taxable or is in excess of the taxable amount, shall be remitted by that person to this state." (§ 6901.5)

they raise the issue before us only to preserve it for challenge before the Supreme Court. To be sure, the regulation implementing section 6901.5 provides that it "do[es] not necessarily limit the rights of customers to pursue refunds from persons who collected tax reimbursement from them in excess of the amount due." (Cal. Code Regs., tit. 18, § 1700, subd. (b)(6).) But Loeffler held that this language did no more than "acknowledge[] that if other remedies are available, the regulation does not interfere with them." (Loeffler, at p. 1122.)

Third, the Board has yet to decide whether the retail pharmacies—and, by extension, the customers—are entitled to a refund. Regulation 1591.1 exempts the sales of lancets and test strips, but only when they are (1) "furnished by a registered pharmacist," and (2) "used by a diabetic patient . . . in accordance with a physician's instructions." (Cal. Code Regs., tit. 18, § 1591.1, subd. (b)(5).) It has yet to be determined whether those two conditions are legally valid or were factually satisfied as to the customers' purchases. In their reply brief on appeal, the customers argue that the Board has conceded that a refund was due because the Board, in its brief on appeal, did not address the merits of the taxability issue and admitted that a 2003 opinion letter sent by a Board staff member arguably setting forth additional prerequisites to application of Regulation 1591.1's exemption was not a "binding determination of the Board." There was no concession. The Board did not address the merits of the taxability issue because the chief issue in this appeal is not the merits, but where and by whom they may be litigated. And the validity or invalidity of the 2003 opinion letter does not alter the undisputed fact that the Board has yet to determine that all of the sales the customers challenge fall within the ambit of Regulation 1591.1's exemption.

For these reasons, the customers have not established that this case involves the "unique circumstances" that empower a court to fashion a new tax refund remedy.[8] Absent such a remedy, there can be no judicial determination that the retail pharmacies' collection of sales tax reimbursement was improper. And absent that determination, none of the customers' claims—all of which are premised on the unlawful collection of sales tax reimbursement—state a viable cause of action. (Centinela Freeman, supra, 1 Cal.5th at p. 1010.)

C. Customers' further arguments

The customers level two further categories of arguments at our conclusion.

First, the customers note that courts must generally "construe . . . statute[s] in a manner that avoid[] doubts as to [their] constitutional validity." (Steen v. Appellate Division of Superior Court (2014) 59 Cal.4th 1045, 1048.) From this, they argue that we must not construe the Revenue and Taxation Code to deny them a judicially fashioned tax refund remedy because doing so will risk violations of the takings clause and due process. No such risks exist.

8 In light of our conclusion that the requisite "unique circumstances" have not been shown, we have no occasion to reach the Board's and retail pharmacies' further arguments that Javor also requires a showing that the consumers first demanded that the retail pharmacies file an administrative refund claim or a showing that the retail pharmacies have maintained records making it possible to remit any refund to the correct customers.

The federal and California Constitutions guarantee that "private property" shall not "be taken for public use, without just compensation." (U.S. Const., 5th Amend.; Cal. Const., art. I, § 19, subd. (a).) Two types of "takings" are assured just compensation: (1) categorical or per se takings, which arise when the government physically occupies property or deprives its owner of all viable uses of the property (Brown v. Legal Foundation of Wash. (2003) 538 U.S. 216, 233 [123 S.Ct. 1406, 155 L.Ed.2d 376]; California Building Industry Assn. v. City of San Jose (2015) 61 Cal.4th 435, 462); and (2) regulatory takings, which arise when government regulation of a property's use sufficiently impairs its value (California Building Industry Assn., at p. 462.) However, it is well settled that "'[t]axes and user fees . . . are not "takings."'" (Koontz v. St. Johns River Water Mgmt. Dist. (2013) 570 U.S. __, __ [133 S.Ct. 2586, 2600-2601, 186 L.Ed.2d 697]; United States v. Sperry Corp. (1989) 493 U.S. 52, 62, fn. 9 [110 S.Ct. 387, 107 L.Ed.2d 290]; accord, San Remo Hotel v. City and County of San Francisco (2002) 27 Cal.4th 643, 671-672 [noting that "the taking of money is different, under the Fifth Amendment, from the taking of real or personal property"].) Thus, the collection of sales tax reimbursement from consumers does not implicate the takings clause.

The federal and California Constitutions also provide that the state shall not deprive persons of their property "without due process of law." (U.S. Const., 14th Amend., § 1; Cal. Const., art. I, § 7.) This guarantee applies to the payment of taxes (T. M. Cobb Co. v. County of Los Angeles (1976) 16 Cal.3d 606, 617, fn. 6), but authorizes a state to relegate taxpayers to a "'postpayment refund action'" as long as they are afforded "'meaningful backward-looking relief to rectify any unconstitutional deprivation.'" (River Garden Retirement Home v. Franchise Tax Bd. (2010) 186 Cal.App.4th 922, 937-938 (River Garden), quoting McKesson Corp. v. Florida Alcohol & Tobacco Div. (1990) 496 U.S. 18, 31 [110 S.Ct. 2238, 110 L.Ed.2d 17] (McKesson); City of Anaheim, supra, 179 Cal.App.4th at p. 831.) A state provides "meaningful backward-looking relief" if it gives taxpayers (1) "a 'fair opportunity to challenge the accuracy and legal validity of their tax obligation,'" and (2) "a '"clear and certain remedy"' for the erroneous or unlawful tax collection." (River Garden, at p. 938, quoting McKesson, at p. 39.)

We conclude that our refusal to craft a judicial tax refund remedy for consumers does not risk a due process violation. To begin, it is not precisely clear how due process applies to them. The payment of sales tax alleged in the operative complaint entails two sequential transactions: Consumers pay sales tax reimbursement to retailers, and retailers pay sales tax to the state. The first transaction is ostensibly outside the reach of due process because it reflects a contractual arrangement between two private parties (§ 1656.1; Coleman v. Department of Personnel Administration (1991) 52 Cal.3d 1102, 1112 ["Only those actions that may fairly be attributed to the state . . . are subject to due process protections"]), and the consumers are not parties to the second transaction. Further, our Supreme Court in Loeffler—although silent on this point—noted no constitutional impediment to its ruling that left consumers with no direct remedy for a refund and instead relegated them to urging Board inquiry and to filing claims or actions under the Administrative Procedure Act. (Loeffler, supra, 58 Cal.4th 1081.) Were we to come to a contrary conclusion, we would effectively overrule Loeffler, something we are not allowed to do except in narrow circumstances not present here. (Auto Equity Sales v. Superior Court (1962) 57 Cal.2d 450, 456.)

Second, the customers assert that our ruling that we are powerless to craft a new judicial tax refund remedy does not warrant dismissal of their breach of contract claims or their second UCL claim. Specifically, the customers urge (1) that their breach of contract claims are grounded in Civil Code section 1656.1, which is effectively part of the Revenue and Taxation Code and is more specific than section 6901.5, and thus cannot be inconsistent with either the Code or section 6901.5, (2) their second breach of contract claim is premised on allegations that one of the retailers who charged sales tax reimbursement sometimes did not mean to do so because its corporate policy did not call for it, and (3) that their second UCL claim is based upon allegations that the retail pharmacies should have informed them of the requirements to qualify for Regulation 1591.1's exemption.

We reject the customers' first argument because, as explained above, the premise of their breach of contract claims is that the retail pharmacies wrongly collected sales tax reimbursement that was not due, yet they have no means in this lawsuit of establishing whether it was due. We reject the customers' second argument because the only contract at issue is the one between the retailer and customer; because the express terms of that contract, which arise from the presumption in Civil Code section 1656.1 because the retailer showed a charge for sales tax on its receipts, are that the retailer is charging sales tax reimbursement; and because the retailer's unexpressed intention not to charge sales tax in some transactions cannot alter the express terms of the parties' contract or otherwise rebut the statutory presumption (Patel v. Liebermensch (2008) 45 Cal.4th 344, 352 ["'The terms of the contract are determinable by an external, not by an internal standard'"]). We reject the customers' third argument because the pharmacies owed no duty to explain how to qualify for the exemption. (Accord, Buller v. Sutter Health (2008) 160 Cal.App.4th 981, 987-988 [insurance company has no duty to explain to clients how to get the best deal]; Levine v. Blue Shield of California (2010) 189 Cal.App.4th 1117, 1136-1137 [same].)

III. Leave To Amend Was Properly Denied

The customers argue that the trial court erred in not allowing them to amend the operative complaint to add a claim that they were suffering an unconstitutional taking. Because, as explained above, such a claim lacks merit as a matter of law, the trial court's conclusion that there was no reasonable possibility the customers could amend their complaint to state a claim was correct.

* * * * * *

The result we reach in this case is not an entirely satisfying one. The retail pharmacies lack any financial incentive to challenge the Board's implementation of Regulation 1591.1 by seeking a refund, and the statutory remedies available to the customers—urging the Board to conduct an audit or filing a claim or lawsuit under the Administrative Procedure Act—while effective enough to satisfy due process, are nevertheless the practical equivalent of allowing them to tug (albeit persistently) at the Board's sleeve. However, this is the result we must reach because our Constitution chiefly assigns the task of creating tax refund remedies to our Legislature, and our Legislature has yet to address the situation that arises when the legal taxpayer has no incentive to seek a direct refund and the economic taxpayer has no right to do so. It is a topic worthy of legislative consideration. Because the prerequisites for making it a topic of judicial consideration are not present, we adhere to the statutes as they are written and affirm the order dismissing this case.

DISPOSITION

The judgment is affirmed. The Board and the retail pharmacies are entitled to their costs on appeal.

THE COURT:*

It is ordered that the opinion filed herein on March 13, 2017, be modified as follows:

* CHAVEZ, Acting P. J., HOFFSTADT, J., GOODMAN, J.†

† Retired judge of the Los Angeles Superior Court, assigned by the Chief Justice pursuant to article VI, section 6 of the California Constitution.

No matter how it is viewed, consumers' payment of the sales tax reimbursement does not effect a "taking": To the extent we focus on the retailer's initial collection of the tax sales reimbursement, it is not a "taking" because the retailer is not a government entity (City of Perris v. Stamper (2016) 1 Cal.5th 576, 591 ["The takings clause . . . prohibits a governmental entity from taking private property for public use without just compensation"], italics added); to the extent we focus on the Board's subsequent receipt of that money as part of the retailer's sales tax, it is not a "taking" because "'[t]axes and user fees . . . are not "takings"'" (Koontz v. St. Johns River Water Mgmt. Dist. (2013) 570 U.S. __, __ [133 S.Ct. 2586, 2600-2601, 186 L.Ed.2d 697]; United States v. Sperry Corp. (1989) 493 U.S. 52, 62, fn. 9 [110 S.Ct. 387, 107 L.Ed.2d 290]; accord, San Remo Hotel v. City and County of San Francisco (2002) 27 Cal.4th 643, 671-672 [noting that "the taking of money is different, under the Fifth Amendment, from the taking of real or personal property"]). Thus, the collection of sales tax reimbursement from consumers does not implicate the takings clause.

2. On page 28, line 8, footnote 9 should be inserted after the sentence ending with "[same].)" The text of footnote 9 should read:

In their 73-page petition for review, the customers thank this Court for "grappling with this difficult area of law" and, noting that briefing "may not have sufficiently anticipated and focused upon this [C]ourt's concerns," proceed to "supply the necessary focus" to their appeal by raising several new arguments that appear nowhere in their prior briefs—namely, that denying them a remedy violates the contract clause of our Constitution, that denying them a remedy violates due process because the collection of sales tax reimbursement by retailers effects an "escheat" to the state, that denying them a remedy effectively invalidates section 6597, and that they can rebut Civil Code section 1656.1's presumption of a contractual agreement with the retailers to collect sales tax reimbursement by showing actual fraud, constructive fraud, undue influence, mistake of fact, and mistake of law. Because the initial round of briefing on appeal is not a dry run for a whole new round of post-opinion briefing on rehearing, we respectfully decline to consider these arguments for the first time on rehearing. (E.g., Conservatorship of Susan T. (1994) 8 Cal.4th 1005, 1013.)

There is no change in the judgment.

Appellants' petition for rehearing is denied.
